As a Flight Attendant I can see many flaws with allowing cell phones to be used in flight on commercial aircraft. One of the main reasons being the extreme rise in tension and irritation among the many passengers. Its a small space and cell phone users have a tendancy to talk loud without realizing it. There also isn't evidence that cell phones are even safe in regards to interfering with navigational equipment.
Another added danger is dangerous people communicating with others on the ground or in another part of the aircraft via cell phone. It would make it very easy to coordinate a terrorist attack when they can call each other up with valuable information such as when the cockpit door is opened to allow the captain a restroom break.
I hope you read this and realize what a mistake it would be to allow cell phones. People can slow down and wait an hour or two until landing to make their phone calls. Thank you for your time.
Sincerely,
Shari Neuman
